Articles

To understand this handout, you must first know:

- An article is either one of three words: a, an, or the.
- An article tells the reader the difference between a specific noun and a general noun.
- An article is either definite (a particular noun) or indefinite (a general noun).

Definite article: *the

Use the with nouns whose specific identity is known to the reader:

- The noun describes a specific person or thing.

  Example: Bob warned me that the psychology test would be difficult.

- The noun has been mentioned previously so the reader knows which specific person, place, or thing the writer refers to.

  Example: A review session for anatomy class will be held on Monday. The review session will cover everything from the first two chapters.

  Justification: A is used before the noun “review session” in the first sentence because the reader doesn't know which specific review session the person is referring to. The is used in the second sentence because now the reader knows which session is being discussed.

- The noun's identity is clear due to a specific context or situation.

  Example: During an eclipse, you should not look directly at the sun.

  Justification: Because there is only one sun in our solar system, the one we are discussing is clear to the reader, so the writer can use the.

Indefinite articles: *a, an

Use a or an with singular nouns only if they can be counted (like one girl, four bananas, two children), and their specific identity is not known to the reader.

Example: A new technique in marketing is being discussed.

Use a before a consonant sound.

Example: a zero, a banana, a frog, a pocket

Use an before a vowel sound and words beginning with an H.

Example: an apple, an echo, an image, an oven, an honor
